It's no surprise that the rise of the U.S. National Team has coincided with the birth and development of the American Professional Soccer League. The APSL is the premier testing ground for soccer talent in America, making it both an ideal home for national team veterans and a springboard for a new generation of U.S. players. Perhaps the best indication of that came at the 1990 World Cup in Italy when the U.S. fielded a 22-man team that included 20 players associated with the APSL at one time or another. All told, more than 60 APSL players have had the honor of representing the United States as a member of the national team. The lineup (including last APSL club):
